Commentary

In April, the AUD hedged global listed real estate index returned +7.40%. Currency hedges insulated overall returns from a strong rise in the AUD. The Fund returned net +7.69% for the month, outperforming the index by +29bps.

Sector review

Global listed real estate staged a recovery this month, with the index returning +7.48% on a local currency basis. This is despite government bond yields across major markets such as the US, closing either flat or up this month.

We believe that the strength in sector returns this month, is likely due to a combination of a few main factors:

- i) Demand for risk assets returned this month, as active combat in the Iran war has de-escalated to negotiations and naval blockades.
- ii) More importantly however, is that reporting season in the global listed real estate sector has been good. Even economically exposed sectors such as Industrial (particularly in Europe) reported no slowdown in tenant leasing activity because of the war. This is in stark contrast to the slowdown felt immediately after the tariff 'liberation day' period of March/April 2025.
- iii) Take-outs of listed REITs continued in April, with First Capital REIT (Canadian Retail), taken private by KingSett Capital (private equity) and Choice Properties (listed REIT) who will divide up the $9b portfolio of assets. This continued trend of listed REIT take-outs is reflective of the attractive valuations many REITs trade at, particularly when compared to both replacement cost and private market values.

Top 3 contributors to monthly portfolio performance (local currency basis)

Company	Sector	Share Price Change	Portfolio average weight	Contribution to Return (local currency)
Macerich	US Retail	+15.0%	5.1%	+0.7%
Invitation Homes	US Single Family Housing	+15.8%	4.7%	+0.7%
Scentre Group	AUS Retail	+11.8%	4.7%	+0.5%

Macerich's share price rose strongly in April. There was no stock-specific news this month that directly drove this movement. However, we initially invested in the stock on the thesis that it was significantly underpriced relative to peers despite the high quality of its portfolio. Broader market recognition of this view has likely driven (and we expect will continue to drive) outperformance.

Invitation Home's share price performed strongly after reporting first quarter results during the month. Share prices for the single-family sector have had a relatively tough year. In the first quarter, the company repurchased a significant amount of their stock (US$439m), a move consistent with value given the implied pricing discount relative to direct market value and replacement cost. The market was also pleased with better-than-expected leasing metrics.

Scentre Group's share price rebounded in April after a relatively tough start to the year. The company provided a strong first quarter update during the month, which showed no sign of consumer weakness. All operating metrics continued to be strong despite potential headwinds from interest rate hikes and fuel price increases.

Bottom 3 contributors to monthly portfolio performance (local currency basis)

Company	Sector	Share Price Change	Portfolio average weight	Contribution to Return (local currency)
Hammerson	UK Retail	-2.4%*	0.3%	-0.03%
Alexandria Real Estate	US Life Science	-12.7%	1.3%	-0.18%
No other negative contributor

*intra-month price change between 27/4 – 30/4

We started building a position in Hammerson intra-month, with the share price ending the month slightly lower than our average buy price. Hammerson owns a portfolio of best-in-class retail assets in the UK, Ireland and France. We have extensively written about why we like the best-in-class retail thematic over the years. Hammerson has transformed its portfolio in recent years, and we believe now is an appropriate time to establish a position, at an attractive entry yield and where medium-term earnings growth per share of 8-10% p.a. is achievable. Like much of best-in-class retail globally, competing supply is low if not nil.

Alexandria's share price fell after reporting its first quarter 2026 results during the month. While key metrics were in line with expectations, the company effectively slightly lowered its 'trough' fourth quarter 2026 earnings guidance, which disappointed the market. Even on a lowered earnings guidance, the company trades at a double-digit earnings yield. We continue to hold this stock in the portfolio.

Outlook

Despite increased short-term volatility and uncertainty from the Iran war, we believe our portfolio is well-positioned to generate competitive risk-adjusted returns over the long term. A strong first quarter reporting season for our investees, and the continued trend of private takeovers of listed REITs provides support to our view. In addition, a lack of development starts in many real estate sub-sectors will support ongoing rental growth in a sector that in our view is trading at a discount to assessed fair value.
