Commentary

In May, the global listed real estate index returned -0.56%, while the Fund returned net -0.53%, outperforming by 3bps.

The drag to the Fund's performance was largely attributable to the higher relative weightings towards Canadian Healthcare and UK/European self-storage REITs. On a market-cap basis, the Fund's skew towards small and mid-caps was an observable detraction.

First-quarter earnings reports largely concluded in May, with results broadly in line with expectations. While the US-Iran war was a recurring theme across management commentary, it appears to have had little impact at the operational level of our investees thus far. That said, we continue to monitor developments closely.

While major indices ended May at record highs, the rally was heavily concentrated in technology stocks. The divergence was stark, with companies outside the sector largely failing to participate in the headline move.

Top 3 contributors to monthly portfolio performance (local currency basis)

Company	Sector	Share Price Change	Portfolio average weight	Contribution to Return (local currency)
National Healthcare Properties	US Healthcare	+13%	2.8%	+0.3%
Alexandria Real Estate	US Life Science	+23%	1.4%	+0.3%
Unite Group	UK Student Accom.	+11%	2.6%	+0.3%

National Healthcare Properties' share price continued its post-IPO rally this month. The stock is up +20% since the April listing, in which the Fund participated. The company reported strong earnings growth, with occupancy crossing the critical 85% mark where pricing power accelerates. The IPO proceeds and a contracted $528m asset sale are expected to de-risk the balance sheet and further concentrate the portfolio into the higher growth senior housing segment.

Alexandria's share price staged a recovery this month. The bounce was likely on the back of a peer, whose strong first quarter result pointed to an inflection in life science fundamentals. This lifted sentiment across the asset class. The scale of the move shows how little the market expects from the sector, which in our view is an opportunity over the long term.

Unite Group reiterated its full-year guidance across key operational metrics at its AGM. While 2026/27 bookings are tracking modestly behind last year, the recent acceleration in letting pace, particularly in the Hello Student (Empiric) portfolio, is encouraging. Unite also progressed its share buyback programme during the month.

Bottom 3 contributors to monthly portfolio performance (local currency basis)

Company	Sector	Share Price Change	Portfolio average weight	Contribution to Return (local currency)
Sienna	CAN Healthcare	-9%	5.0%	-0.5%
Chartwell	CAN Healthcare	-6%	5.4%	-0.3%
Digital Realty	US Data Centre	-5%	4.7%	-0.3%

In local currency terms, Chartwell and Sienna have posted a three-year total return of +176% and +158% respectively (to end April 2026). In the context of this long-term outperformance, we regard the month's share-price pullback as an ordinary market fluctuation rather than any deterioration of fundamentals.

Both companies reported strong results during the month. With senior housing occupancy levels now at cycle highs in Canada, a bearish reading might argue that the leasing runway is beginning to shorten. In our view, this underestimates both the difficulty of bringing new supply to market and the durability of the demographic demand supporting these businesses.

Digital Realty's share price gave back some ground this month, having been among the strongest performers year to date. The pullback came amid continued market debate over the sustainability of AI-related capex, and some volatility is to be expected against this backdrop.

Having delivered another set of strong leasing volumes in Q1 2026, we remain confident in our position in Digital Realty. This is supported by the exposure to hyperscaler demand and the difficult-to-replicate positioning of its assets.

Outlook

While the unpredictable macroeconomic backdrop and elevated geopolitical tensions are likely to drive near-term sentiment, we remain steadfast in our fundamentals-driven approach to investing. As such, we remain conviction holders of our investees at current valuations.
